On 8 May 1985, West Germany’s president Richard von Weizsäcker delivered something akin to the Gettysburg Address – not for a nation in the midst of war, as was the case for the United States’ president Abraham Lincoln in 1863, but for a country working through the memory and the meaning of a lost war 40 years after its end. There were, of course, vast differences in the two speeches. Given on a grey day on Cemetery Hill in the Pennsylvanian town for which the address is named, Lincoln’s speech to union soldiers lasted all of two minutes. Weizsäcker’s, by contrast, went on for three quarters of an hour, the German president weighing each syllable of each word and delivering them in measured tones to representatives of parliament in Bonn. The two speeches also contrasted in the way they invoked the past. Marking a battle that had transpired four months earlier, Lincoln did not utter the word ‘slavery’. Instead, he evocatively recalled a time – ‘fourscore and seven years ago’ – when ‘our fathers brought forth, on this continent, a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.’ Weizsäcker, somewhat in contrast, faced the Nazi past without flinching. He pleaded that 8 May 1945, the day of defeat, not be separated from 30 January 1933, the day Hitler had seized power.

Weizsäcker struck an honest tone. He named the names of the groups who suffered. We remember and mourn all the dead of war and dictatorship, Weizsäcker intoned. He underscored especially the ‘6 million Jews’ killed in concentration camps, and singled out the citizens of the Soviet Union and Poland. Then, as he read through a scroll of agony, Weizsäcker mourned a third group, ‘our countrymen’, including the German soldiers who lost their lives, civilians who died in aerial attacks, and the many millions of expellees forced from their homes in eastern Europe after the war. Less expected, Weizsäcker also evoked the memory of the murdered Sinti and Roma people, the homosexuals killed, the mentally disabled whose lives the Nazis extinguished, and those they eradicated because of their religious or political conviction.

For some of these groups, in particular homosexuals and Sinti and Roma, no German leader had ever uttered their names in a public speech in the context of a national day of commemoration. Weizsäcker also recalled the heroism and sacrifice of German resisters, and not just those in the army, but also those in the trade unions and among the communists. Finally, Germany’s president introduced new ways of thinking about the fate of some 12 million Germans expelled from the east (mainly from Poland, the Czech Republic and the Soviet Union).

In the collection of Plato’s dialogues that I rescued from the garbage pile on that winter night in Queens, I encountered an old man named Socrates in his final days. He was defending himself against accusations of corrupting the youth and of introducing new gods to the city. ‘Men of Athens,’ he protested, “I am grateful and I am your friend, but ... as long as I draw breath and am able, I shall not cease to practise philosophy, to exhort you ... [asking] are you not ashamed of your eagerness to possess as much wealth, reputation and honours as possible, while you do not care for nor give thought to wisdom or truth, or the best possible state of your soul?’

By the end of the collection, we find him in prison on the day appointed for his execution, ‘calmly and easily’ drinking the poison, laying down, and dying: ‘Such was the end of our comrade,’ says the first-person narrator, ‘a man who, we would say, was of all those we have known the best, and also the wisest and the most upright.’

I did not need to be rich, privileged or cultured to find in those words something that spoke to the deepest sense of my own being. And I did not need to be white or European to be startled by the claim that ‘the unexamined life is not worth living’.

Every summer since 2009, I have used these same Platonic dialogues to introduce low-income high-school students, who hope to be the first in their families to attend college, to the philosophic, ethical and political tradition that Socrates inspired. Every year, I see my students roused to serious self-examination and, in many cases, to an earnest and lasting reorientation of their lives. They do not see Thucydides, Aristotle, Hobbes, Locke, and other texts we study, as alien objects belonging to others, but as thinkers who speak with a living voice to issues of urgency and relevance to their own experience. Again and again, I see these young people awoken to a source of self-worth and meaning that is not constrained by the material limitations that have otherwise hemmed in their lives.

What, according to you, is the central theme of the passage?

Options :

1. ✓ That ancient literary and philosophy greats spoke with relevance and meaning that have timeless appeal and impact
2. ✗ That Socrates was the greatest thinker and philosopher who ever lived.
3. ✗ That the underprivileged need not believe that the rich tradition of literature, philosophy are meant only for the upper classes.
4. ✗ That all humans need to examine about their deepest selves and not second guess their innate qualities

How do you summarise the meaning of the words – ‘the unexamined life is not worth living’?

Options :

1. ✗ Life is full of tests that fate throws on our path, and man must learn to handle each challenge with thought, agility and cunning.
2. ✓ Every human must think deeply to understand the meaning and reason of his existence in order to self-actualize oneself.
3. ✗ If man is different from animals, then thinking appears to be the only difference. So a man must use his power of thinking to differentiate himself.
4. ✗ Life is a series of accidents that God has planned ahead of time, and our lives have meaning only when we surrender to Him.

In the collection of Plato's dialogues that I rescued from the garbage pile on that winter night in Queens, I encountered an old man named Socrates in his final days. He was defending himself against accusations of corrupting the youth and of introducing new gods to the city. 'Men of Athens,' he protested, "I am grateful and I am your friend, but ... as long as I draw breath and am able, I shall not cease to practise philosophy, to exhort you ... [asking] are you not ashamed of your eagerness to possess as much wealth, reputation and honours as possible, while you do not care for nor give thought to wisdom or truth, or the best possible state of your soul?"

By the end of the collection, we find him in prison on the day appointed for his execution, 'calmly and easily' drinking the poison, laying down, and dying: 'Such was the end of our comrade,' says the first-person narrator, 'a man who, we would say, was of all those we have known the best, and also the wisest and the most upright.'

I did not need to be rich, privileged or cultured to find in those words something that spoke to the deepest sense of my own being. And I did not need to be white or European to be startled by the claim that 'the unexamined life is not worth living'.

Every summer since 2009, I have used these same Platonic dialogues to introduce low-income high-school students, who hope to be the first in their families to attend college, to the philosophic, ethical and political tradition that Socrates inspired. Every year, I see my students roused to serious self-examination and, in many cases, to an earnest and lasting reorientation of their lives. They do not see Thucydides, Aristotle, Hobbes, Locke, and other texts we study, as alien objects belonging to others, but as thinkers who speak with a living voice to issues of urgency and relevance to their own experience. Again and again, I see these young people awoken to a source of self-worth and meaning that is not constrained by the material limitations that have otherwise hemmed in their lives.

विद्यार्थी जीवन ही वह समय है जिसमें बच्चों के चरित्र व्यवहार तथा आचरण को जैसा चाहे वैसा रूप दिया जा सकता है। यह अवस्था भावी वृक्ष की उस कोमल शाखा के समान है जिसे जिधर चाहे मोड़ा जा सकता है। विकसित वृक्ष की शाखाओं को मोड़ना सम्भव नहीं। छात्रावस्था उस श्वेत चादर की तरह है, जिसमें जैसा प्रभाव डालना हो, डाला जा सकता है। सफेद चादर में जो एक बार रंग चढ़ गया, फिर वह पूर्वावस्था को प्राप्त नहीं कर सकता। इसलिए प्राचीन काल से ही विद्यार्थी जीवन के महत्त्व को स्वीकार किया गया है। इसी अवस्था में अच्छे संस्कार और सद्वृत्तियाँ पोषित की जा सकती हैं। इसलिए प्राचीन समय में बालक को घर से दूर गुरुकुल में रहकर कठोर अनुशासन का पालन करना पड़ता था।
